

TRANSCRIPTION - ORIGINAL FOLLOWS

As a sequel to a series of US-Pakistan diplomatic discussions held this year, a Pakistani military delegation, headed by Defense Secretary General M. Rahim Khan, visited the Department of Defense 13-16 July 1981. The purpose of these bilateral military talks was to review Pakistan's security situation as it has been altered by the presence of foreign military forces in Afghanistan and to examine in greater detail Pakistan's specific near-term and longer-term requests for purchasing U.S. military equipment to strengthen its national defense.

During his stay, Secretary-General Khan met with Deputy Secretary of Defense Carlucci, Under Secretary of State Buckley and various other DOD and Department of State officials. Additionally, Pakistani Ministry of Defense, Joint Staff, Army, Air Force and Navy Representatives joined their U.S. counterparts for working group sessions to assess Pakistan's defense requirements and the ability of the U.S. to help meet these equipment needs. In conjunction with the visit, a Pakistan Air Force team previously toured U.S. air bases to obtain greater familiarization with the F-16 aircraft the U.S. has agreed to sell to Pakistan.

Convinced that a strong, independent Pakistan is a necessary element in enhancing the stability of the vital Southwest Asia area, the U.S. presented for Pakistan's consideration cost estimates and delivery times for a wide range of major defense equipment of interest to Pakistan. Continued U.S.-Pakistan military supply discussions will be based on the cordial, constructive and cooperative exchange of information accomplished during this visit.

TRANSCRIPTION - ORIGINAL FOLLOWS

[same page]

JOINT STATEMENT

As a sequel to a series of U.S.-Pakistan diplomatic discussions held this year, a Pakistani military delegation, headed by Defense Secretary General M. Rahim Khan, visited the Department of Defense 13-15 July 1981. The purpose of these bilateral military talks was to review Pakistan's security situation as it has been altered by the presence of foreign military forces in Afghanistan and to examine in greater detail Pakistan's specific near-term and longer-term requests for purchasing U.S. military equipment to strengthen its national defense.

During his stay, Secretary-General Khan met with Deputy Secretary of Defense Carlucci, Under Secretary of State Buckley and various other DoD and Department of State officials. Additionally, Pakistani Ministry of Defense, Joint Staff, Army, Air Force and Navy representatives joined their U.S. counterparts for working group sessions to assess Pakistan's defense requirements and the ability of the U.S. to help meet these equipment needs. In conjunction with the visit, a Pakistan Air Force team previously toured U.S. air bases to obtain greater familiarization with the F-16 aircraft the U.S. has agreed to sell to Pakistan.

Convinced that a strong, independent Pakistan is a necessary element in enhancing the stability of the vital Southwest Asia area, the U.S. presented for Pakistan's consideration cost estimates and delivery times for a wide range of major defense equipment of interest to Pakistan. Continued U.S.-Pakistan military supply discussions will be based on the cordial, constructive and cooperative exchange of information accomplished during this visit.